QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. DID THE COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SIXTH CIRCUIT MISINTERPRET THIS COURT'S DECISION IN SCOTT V. HARRIS?

2. SHOULD THE EXISTENCE OF DIFFERENT INTERPRETATIONS OF GENUINE MATERIAL FACTS BY FEDERAL JUDGES ON AN APPELLATE COURT PRECLUDE UPHOLDING A GRANTING OF SUMMARY JUDGMENT BY A DISTRICT COURT?

PARTIES TO THE PROCEEDINGS

Petitioner is a citizen of the State of Tennessee who at the time mentioned in this Petition was a pre-trial detainee at the Criminal Justice Center of the Metropolitan Government of Nashville and Davidson County, Tennessee.

Respondent is a citizen of the State of Tennessee who at the time mentioned in this Petition was a Correctional Officer, employed by the Davidson County Tennessee Sheriff's Department assigned to the Criminal Justice Center.

OPINIONS BELOW

The Sixth Circuit Opinion (Appendix A) is reported at Griffin v. Hardwick, 604 F.3d 949 (6th Cir. 2010). The District Court Opinion (Appendix B) has not been reported.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

The Judgment of the Sixth Circuit was entered on May 13, 2010. The Court of Appeals entered an Order denying a timely petition for rehearing on June 16, 2010. (Appendix C)

The Jurisdiction of this Court is involved under 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS INVOLVED

This case involves the Seventh and Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States of America.

The Seventh Amendment states in pertinent part:

> In suits at Common Law, where the value in controversy shall exceed Twenty Dollars, the right to be tried by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise reexamined in any Court of the United States, that accordance to the Rules of Common Law.

The Fourteenth Amendment states in pertinent part:

> No State shall rule or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction from equal protection of the laws.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A. Facts of the Case

On August 20, 2005, the Petitioner, Trudy Griffin had accompanied her son while he picked up his children at the children's maternal grandmother's home. Griffin's son's ex-wife had obtained a restraining order against him. When Griffin and her son arrived at the home, the ex-wife called the police. Once the police arrived, Griffin and one of the officers got into a verbal argument. Griffin was arrested and handcuffed. Griffin was placed in the back of one of the officer's patrol cars and transported to the Metropolitan Criminal Justice Center [CJC]. During the transport, Griffin sustained some bruising to her arms and back. (T.R. 26 at 1) Griffin was booked and placed into a cell.

While in the CJC, Griffin asked an officer on the staff if she could go to the nurse's station for treatment of her arm bruise. This request was granted. Griffin walked down a hall to talk to a nurse. At the nurse's station she complained about her back and demanded to be transported to the hospital. Her request was denied and she began to argue loudly with the nurse. The Respondent, Darrell Hardrick, observed this behavior. Hardrick apprehended Griffin and threatened her with words she "was going to live in his hell" and that she "was his bitch." Griffin then attempted to walk away from Hardrick and the nurse's station because she was scared by the threats Hardrick had made. She turned to go back to a nearby holding cell. As she began to walk away, Hardrick grabbed Griffin's right arm. Griffin pulled her arm away telling him to "watch her arm." As Griffin walked away another officer, Pamela Rutledge, took hold of her left arm, while Hardrick took a hold of her right arm. Griffin did not resist either officer. Then suddenly, and without warning, Hardrick intentionally tripped Griffin causing Rutledge to fall on top of her breaking Griffin's leg. After falling to the floor another officer, who was standing close by, told Griffin her leg was not broken and proceeded to drag her to another holding cell. Griffin claimed her rights guaranteed her under the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution were violated by the Defendant Hardrick.

The entire incident was caught on video tape. (Docket Entry No. 11, Ex. 5 at 15:08:45-15:09:01)

B. Opinions Below

The District Court, after viewing the tape of the incident, held that a reasonable jury could not conclude that Hardrick acted in a sufficiently wanton manner. This decision was based on the District Court's interpretation of what the tape showed. (Docket Entry No. 31, pp. 9-11)

The Court of Appeals upheld the District Court's decision based upon two members of the panel's interpretation of what the video tape showed. (App. A., p. 3)

However, one member of the panel dissented. This Judge's dissention was based upon her interpretation of what the video showed. (App. A., p. 12)

All of the Honorable Judges who ruled in this case made their rulings based upon a factual determination.

REASON FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

I.

THE DECISION OF THE COURT OF APPEALS CONFLICTS WITH THE DECISION OF THE SUPREME COURT

The Court of Appeals' decision directly conflicts with this Court's decision in Scott v. Harris, 550 U.S. 372, 380-81, 127 S.Ct. 1769 (2007). In Scott this Court reiterated that at the summary judgment stage, facts must be viewed in the light more favorable to the non-moving party, if there is a genuine dispute as to those facts. If the facts of a case come from a video, unless those facts are clearly portrayed, they are entitled to an interpretation most favorable to the non-moving party. Scott, 550 U.S. at 380. In the case at bar, Federal Judges are not in complete agreement that the facts depicted in the video blatantly contradict Griffin's testimony so that no reasonable jury would believe her. If Federal Judges, as reasonable people, can disagree on what the facts in the video show, a jury made up of reasonable people could also disagree on what the video shows.

Mrs. Griffin, as a citizen, should be able to rely on the Second Amendment to the United States Constitution, which guarantees her a trial before a jury of her peers. Summary judgment is a method approved to dispose of cases where there are not genuine factual or legal issues in dispute for a jury to consider. But where such facts exist as in this case, juries should judge those facts, not Judges. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586-587, 106 S.Ct. 1349 (1986) Anderson v. Liberty Lobby Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 247-248, 106 S.Ct. 2505 (1986)

II.

THE QUESTION PRESENTED IS IMPORTANT

Today, more frequently, incidents which are the basis for cases brought pursuant to civil right violations, are being prosecuted based on video and DVD evidence. If this Court's decision in Scott is to be applied correctly by the Appellate Courts, differences in interpretation of the facts of a case by Federal Judges at the Appellate level should, at the summary judgment stage of case, preclude the upholding of summary judgment decisions at the District Court level.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, the Petition for a Writ of Certiorari should be granted.

Respectfully submitted,

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Middle District of Tennessee at Nashville.
No. 08-00828—Aleta Arthur Trauger, District Judge.

Argued: March 10, 2010

Decided and Filed: May 13, 2010

Before: COLE, GILMAN, and WHITE, Circuit Judges.

COUNSEL

ARGUED: Phillip L. Davidson, LAW OFFICES, Nashville, Tennessee, for Appellant. Keli J. Oliver, METROPOLITAN NASHVILLE DEPARTMENT OF LAW, Nashville, Tennessee, for Appellee. ON BRIEF: Phillip L. Davidson, LAW OFFICES, Nashville, Tennessee, for Appellant. Keli J. Oliver, METROPOLITAN NASHVILLE DEPARTMENT OF LAW, Nashville, Tennessee, for Appellee.

GILMAN, J., delivered the opinion of the court, in which COLE, J., joined. WHITE, J. (pp. 11-13), delivered a separate dissenting opinion.

RONALD LEE GILMAN, Circuit Judge. Trudy Griffin was brought to the Davidson County Criminal Justice Center after she was arrested for disorderly conduct. When Griffin created a disturbance while speaking with a nurse at the Center, two corrections officers, Darrell Hardrick and Pamela Rutledge, each took one of her arms and attempted to guide Griffin away from the nurse's station. Griffin at that point began struggling with the officers, causing Hardrick to perform a "leg-sweep maneuver" to bring Griffin to the floor so that she could be handcuffed and taken back to her holding cell. As Griffin fell to the floor, however, Rutledge tumbled with her. Rutledge accidentally landed on one of Griffin's legs, breaking Griffin's tibia.

Griffin sued Hardrick over the incident, alleging an excessive-force claim under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 as well as a state-law claim for battery. The district court granted Hardrick's motion for summary judgment, holding that no reasonable jury could find that Hardrick had intended the unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain when he tripped Griffin. For the reasons set forth below, we AFFIRM the judgment of the district court.

I. BACKGROUND

A. Factual background

Griffin was arrested on August 20, 2005 for disorderly conduct and resisting arrest. She was transported to the Davidson County Criminal Justice Center (Center) for booking. While she was in a holding cell at the Center, Griffin asked permission to go to the nurse's station. After permission was granted, she walked down the hall to speak with a nurse about bruises on her back and arms. Griffin repeatedly demanded that she be transported to a local hospital so that she could be treated for these injuries. When the nurse told Griffin that she would not be taken to a hospital, Griffin refused to take "no" for an answer and began raising her voice with the nurse. At this point, Hardrick, a corrections officer with the Davidson County Sheriff's Office who was in charge of the booking area, approached Griffin.

Both parties agree that "Hardrick observed [Griffin] acting in a non-compliant manner with regard to the instructions she received from the nurse," and that Griffin "walked away from Hardrick when he attempted to speak with her about the situation." Griffin claims that as she walked away, Hardrick threatened her by saying that "she was going to live in his hell" and that she "was his bitch." Hardrick then took hold of one of Griffin's arms, but Griffin attempted to pull away. Griffin claims that she told Hardrick to "watch her arms" because they were sore from being bruised earlier.

At that point, Hardrick asked Rutledge, another corrections officer at the Center, to assist with the situation. When Rutledge reached for Griffin's other arm, Griffin pulled her arm away (although she contends that she pulled away only "a little bit"). Hardrick and Rutledge then began leading Griffin down the hall toward her holding cell. Griffin claims that she was not struggling, resisting, or acting aggressively. She asserts that Hardrick nevertheless suddenly tripped her, causing her to fall to the floor. This in turn caused Rutledge to accidentally fall on top of her, which fractured Griffin's tibia.

Hardrick, on the other hand, contends that Griffin was jerking and attempting to get away. This prompted him to perform a "leg-sweep maneuver," typically used by officers to bring a noncompliant individual to the ground with the least amount of force necessary. He does not dispute, however, that Rutledge accidentally fell on Griffin's leg as a result of the leg sweep. After Griffin was handcuffed on the ground, other Center employees carried her into the holding-cell area. An ambulance was then called to the Center for the purpose of taking Griffin to the hospital, where she required surgery, eight screws, and a metal plate to fix her broken tibia.

A security camera caught the incident on videotape. The video establishes that Griffin approached the nurse's station and remained there for just under 10 minutes, alternating between standing at the window and sitting in a chair placed by the station. She can be seen motioning and waiving her arms at various points throughout her conversation with the nurse. Hardrick walked toward Griffin and spoke with her for approximately 20 seconds before Rutledge approached the nurse's station and stood a few feet away from Hardrick and Griffin.

After another 10 seconds, Griffin began to walk away from Hardrick, who then reached out to take her right arm. Griffin attempted to jerk her arm away, but Hardrick maintained his grip, and Rutledge stepped in to take Griffin's left arm. After a second or two of struggling with Griffin outside the nurse's station, Hardrick and Rutledge began to escort her down the hallway, which she resisted. Hardrick then stuck out his leg to trip Griffin. At this point, Griffin fell to the floor, and Rutledge tumbled on top of her.

B. Procedural history

In May 2006, Griffin filed a lawsuit in a Tennessee state court against Hardrick and the Metropolitan Government of Nashville and Davidson County (Metro), alleging a claim of battery under the Tennessee Governmental Tort Liability Act. See Tenn. Code Ann. §§ 29-20-101 to -408. Griffin later dismissed her claim against Metro, but added an excessive-force claim against Hardrick pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983. Section 1983 provides a cause of action against those who violate a person's constitutional rights while acting under color of state law. This caused Hardrick to timely remove the case to the United States District Court for the Middle District of Tennessee.

Hardrick subsequently moved for summary judgment. In response to Griffin's § 1983 claim, he argued that not only was he entitled to qualified immunity, but that Griffin's claim could not succeed on the merits because Hardrick's use of force did not constitute the wanton infliction of pain. Hardrick further contended that he used only the amount of force necessary to subdue Griffin, so that her battery claim was likewise without merit.

The district court granted Hardrick's motion for summary judgment in June 2009. Because the court concluded that no reasonable jury could find that Hardrick's conduct constituted the wanton infliction of pain, it did not address Hardrick's qualified-immunity argument. The court also decided that where the identical use of force leads to both a § 1983 claim and a state-law battery claim, the same standard applies to both causes of action. It therefore granted summary judgment to Hardrick on Griffin's state-law battery claim as well. Griffin has timely appealed.

II. ANALYSIS

A. Standard of review

We review de novo a district court's grant of summary judgment. ACLU of Ky. v. Grayson County, 591 F.3d 837, 843 (6th Cir. 2010). Summary judgment is proper where no genuine issue of material fact exists and the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c)(2). In considering a motion for summary judgment, the district court must draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the nonmoving party. Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 587 (1986). The central issue is "whether the evidence presents a sufficient disagreement to require submission to a jury or whether it is so one-sided that one party must prevail as a matter of law." Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 251-52 (1986).

B. Griffin's § 1983 claim

Section 1983 prohibits a person "acting under color of state law" from depriving an individual "of a right secured by the Federal Constitution or laws of the United States." Wolotsky v. Huhn, 960 F.2d 1331, 1335 (6th Cir. 1992). Griffin's complaint alleged that Hardrick violated § 1983 by using excessive force against her in violation of the Fourth Amendment. The district court, however, interpreted her claim as alleging a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment, and Griffin does not dispute this characterization on appeal.

Prisoners are protected from the use of excessive force by the Eighth Amendment. Whitley v. Albers, 475 U.S. 312, 327 (1986). As a pretrial detainee, however, Griffin's rights stem from the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, which "protects a pretrial detainee from the use of excessive force that amounts to punishment." Graham v. Connor, 490 U.S. 386, 395 n.10 (1989). The law is unsettled as to whether the analysis for a Fourteenth Amendment excessive-force claim and an Eighth Amendment excessive-force claim is the same. See Leary v. Livingston County, 528 F.3d 438, 443 (6th Cir. 2008) ("[T]here is room for debate over whether the Due Process Clause grants pretrial detainees more protections than the Eighth Amendment does . . . ."). Compare Orem v. Rephann, 523 F.3d 442, 446 (4th Cir. 2008) (applying the Eighth Amendment standard to a pretrial detainee's excessive-force claim under the Fourteenth Amendment), with Wilson v. Williams, 83 F.3d 870, 875 (7th Cir. 1996) ("Since [the protection of the Fourteenth Amendment] extends beyond the prohibition of merely 'cruel and unusual' punishment, pretrial detainees must arguably be afforded a higher standard than that provided by the Eighth Amendment.").

In the instant case, however, both parties and the district court relied on this court's unpublished decision in Watkins v. Evans, Nos. 95-4162, 95-4341, 1996 WL 499094, at *2 (6th Cir. Sept. 3, 1996), which held that the standards are the same. Because Griffin does not seek to invoke the potentially broader protections of the Fourteenth Amendment, we will analyze her claim under the Eighth Amendment standard. See Lewis v. Downey, 581 F.3d 467, 475 (7th Cir. 2009) (analyzing a pretrial detainee's excessive-force claim under the same standard as an Eighth Amendment excessive-force claim where the detainee did not seek to invoke "any safeguards the Fourteenth Amendment provides beyond those it shares with the Eighth Amendment").

The test for whether the use of force violates the Eighth Amendment requires a court to determine if the defendant's conduct caused the "unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain." Moore v. Holbrook, 2 F.3d 697, 700 (6th Cir. 1993) (citation omitted). In other words,

> [t]o ascertain whether excessive force was used under the Eighth Amendment, the court must determine whether the force was applied in a good-faith effort to maintain or restore discipline, or maliciously and sadistically to > cause harm. Such a claim has both an objective and a subjective component. The objective component requires that the pain be serious. The subjective component requires that the offending, non-penal conduct be wanton.

Watkins, 1996 WL 499094, at *2 (citations omitted).

Hardrick does not dispute that Griffin suffered serious pain, so the objective element is satisfied. We must therefore determine if a genuine issue exists as to whether Hardrick's conduct in using the leg-sweep maneuver on Griffin was "applied in a good-faith effort to maintain or restore discipline, or maliciously and sadistically to cause harm." See id.

As an initial matter, Griffin argues that the district court erred in considering the videotape when ruling on Hardrick's motion for summary judgment. The Supreme Court, however, has held that a court may properly consider videotape evidence at the summary judgment stage. "When opposing parties tell two different stories, one of which is blatantly contradicted by the record, so that no reasonable jury could believe it, a court should not adopt that version of the facts for purposes of ruling on a motion for summary judgment." Scott v. Harris, 550 U.S. 372, 380 (2007) (holding that, based on videotape evidence, a police officer did not use excessive force in ramming a fleeing suspect's car). Moreover, the reasonableness of a defendant's actions is an appropriate matter to determine on summary judgment. Dunn v. Matatall, 549 F.3d 348, 353 (6th Cir. 2008) (explaining that Scott "instructs us to determine as a matter of law whether the events depicted on [a] video, taken in the light most favorable to [the nonmoving party], show that the Officers' conduct was objectively reasonable"). The district court thus properly considered the videotape evidence in determining whether Hardrick's actions were wanton.

Turning now to whether Hardrick's use of force was excessive, this court has previously cautioned that an official's decision to use force is entitled to deference:

> [O]fficials confronted with a prison disturbance must balance the threat [that] unrest poses to inmates, prison workers, administrators, and visitors against the harm inmates may suffer if guards use force. Because prison officials must make their decisions in haste, under pressure, and frequently without the luxury of a second chance, we must grant them wide-ranging deference in the adoption and execution of policies and practices that in their judgment are needed to preserve internal order and discipline and to maintain institutional security.

Combs v. Wilkinson, 315 F.3d 548, 557 (6th Cir. 2002) (first alteration in original) (citations and internal quotation marks omitted). The issue is therefore not whether the use of force was absolutely necessary in hindsight, but "whether the use of force could plausibly have been thought necessary, or instead evinced such wantonness with respect to the unjustified infliction of harm as is tantamount to a knowing willingness that it occur." Whitley, 475 U.S. at 321.

Griffin does not dispute that she was acting in a noncompliant manner toward the nurse, that she walked away from Hardrick while he was speaking with her, and that she attempted to jerk her arm away from Hardrick. As is evident from the video, Hardrick was calm and nonaggressive during his initial conversation with Griffin. He stood at least a foot away from Griffin and spoke with her for about 30 seconds before ever touching her. Most importantly, the video establishes that Griffin was clearly struggling against both Hardrick and Rutledge before Hardrick employed the leg-sweep maneuver.

The fact that Griffin had been engaged in a loud, lengthy, and animated conversation with the nurse gave Hardrick a reasonable basis to believe that force would be necessary to control Griffin. Similarly, Griffin was struggling against Hardrick and Rutledge as they attempted to lead her away from the nurse's station, giving Hardrick a plausible reason to believe that force was necessary to bring Griffin to the floor so that she could be handcuffed and taken back to her holding cell. Hardrick's initial calm demeanor with Griffin suggests that he was not seeking to wantonly inflict pain on her, but was attempting to bring her under control.

Griffin does not dispute that Hardrick was in compliance with all relevant Center policies on the use of force, and she does not dispute Hardrick's contention that he was acting according to his training when employing the leg-sweep maneuver. Indeed, to counter the fact that Hardrick was responding to the situation as trained, Griffin argues only that the opinion of the subject-control instructor for the Davidson County Sheriff's Office—that the leg-sweep maneuver was proper under the circumstances—was based on the video, which testimony she claims would invade the province of the jury and should therefore have been excluded from consideration on summary judgment.

But as discussed above, a court may properly consider videotape evidence at the summary-judgment stage, Scott, 550 U.S. at 380-81, so an expert opinion based on such evidence is appropriate, see Fed. R. Evid. 702; Brainard v. Am. Skandia Life Assurance Corp., 432 F.3d 655, 663 (6th Cir. 2005) (holding that an expert opinion is permitted at the summary judgment stage so long as the opinion is not "a conclusory assertion about ultimate legal issues" (citation omitted)). The fact that Hardrick was acting according to established procedures suggests that he had not undertaken the leg-sweep maneuver in a wanton manner, but was acting as he was trained while attempting to gain control of Griffin. Moreover, there is no basis whatsoever to infer that Hardrick intended to use such force as would break Griffin's leg. The force that did so came solely from the unfortunate accident of Rutledge collapsing on Griffin as they both fell to the floor. These circumstances do not support a § 1983 claim for the wanton infliction of pain on the part of Hardrick.

In response to the adverse ruling by the district court, Griffin argues that she presented several genuine issues of material fact sufficient to defeat Hardrick's motion for summary judgment. Griffin, for example, contends that "Hardrick never denied that Griffin received injuries to her arms before coming into the [Center]," and that he "never denied that he made threats towards Griffin that 'she was going to live in his hell' and that she 'was his bitch.'" But these alleged threats do not create a genuine issue of material fact under the particular circumstances here because the videotape shows that Griffin was still struggling with the officers at the time Hardrick employed the leg-sweep maneuver. So at that moment, Hardrick had a reasonable basis to believe that further force was necessary to control Griffin, even if he had earlier made the alleged generalized threats against her.

Griffin next argues that she was walking away because she was scared of Hardrick and wanted to return to her holding cell, thus creating a genuine issue of material fact. But this allegation is not material even if it is true (which seems doubtful given Hardrick's calm demeanor as shown on the videotape when he initially interacted with Griffin). Whether or not she felt that she had a good reason for walking away, Griffin was still noncompliant with the nurse and was resisting Hardrick and Rutledge before Hardrick used the leg-sweep maneuver. Moreover, Griffin has never contended that she communicated her alleged motivation to Hardrick, so her reason for noncompliance is irrelevant as to whether Hardrick reasonably thought that force was necessary to bring Griffin under control.

Other issues cited by Griffin are clearly contradicted by the record. She claims that Hardrick tripped her without provocation and that at no time did she resist either Hardrick or Rutledge. To the contrary, the video clearly shows Griffin resisting the officers' efforts to lead her down the hallway and her efforts to break away from them.

The district court thus did not err in granting Hardrick's motion for summary judgment on Griffin's § 1983 excessive-force claim. Although we consider this to be a close case, we ultimately conclude that no reasonable jury could find that Hardrick "evinced such wantonness . . . as is tantamount to a knowing willingness" that Griffin's injury occur. See Whitley v.

Abers, 475 U.S. 312, 321 (1986). We therefore need not decide the merits of Hardrick's argument that he is entitled to qualified immunity.

C. Griffin's state-law battery claim

In addition to her § 1983 claim, Griffin alleged a state-law battery claim against Hardrick. Griffin brought this claim under the Tennessee Governmental Tort Liability Act, which permits individuals to bring a cause of action against governmental employees who allegedly commit intentional torts. See Baines v. Wilson County, 86 S.W.3d 575, 583 n.5 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2002). Griffin's appellate brief, however, does not mention her battery claim. Indeed, her Statement of the Case references only an excessive-force violation against Hardrick pursuant to § 1983. Nor was her battery claim mentioned at oral argument. She has therefore likely abandoned this claim on appeal. See Marks v. Newcourt Credit Group, Inc., 342 F.3d 444, 462 (6th Cir. 2003) ("An appellant waives an issue when he fails to present it in his initial briefs before this court."). But see Madden v. Chattanooga City Wide Serv. Dep't, 549 F.3d 666, 673 (6th Cir. 2008) (holding that where the same analysis applies to a plaintiff's federal and state-law causes of action, a defendant does not waive its defense to the state-law claim by failing to present the state-law claim on appeal if it argued the federal claim).

But even if Griffin has not abandoned this claim, it fails on the merits. Where a plaintiff asserts a battery claim under Tennessee law that arises out of the same use of force as her § 1983 excessive-force claim, the analysis is the same for both causes of action. That is, "whether the analysis concerns whether an officer violated a plaintiff's constitutional rights by using excessive force or whether the analysis concerns whether an officer committed state-law battery by using force that was 'clearly excessive,' the same principles . . . are applied." Lee v. Metro. Gov't of Nashville & Davidson County, 596 F. Supp. 2d 1101, 1118 (M.D. Tenn. 2009) (holding that officers entitled to summary judgment on a § 1983 excessive-force claim were automatically entitled to summary judgment on the Tennessee common-law battery claim); see also Harris v. Metro. Gov't of Nashville, No. 3:06-0868, 2007 WL 4481176, at *9 (M.D. Tenn. Dec. 18, 2007) ("[T]he plaintiff has set forth adequate grounds for his [§ 1983] claim of excessive force against each of the officers. Because Tennessee courts apply the same 'excessive force' principles to assault and battery claims against police officers, the plaintiff has additionally set forth adequate grounds against each of the officers for assault and battery under Tennessee law."). We thus find no error in the district court's conclusion that because Hardrick was entitled to summary judgment on Griffin's § 1983 claim, he was also entitled to summary judgment on her state-law battery claim.

III. CONCLUSION

For all of the reasons set forth above, we AFFIRM the judgment of the district court.

DISSENT

HELENE N. WHITE, Circuit Judge (dissenting). I respectfully dissent. I agree that it is appropriate for the court to consider a video of the events when ruling on a motion for summary judgment, and to discount any allegations clearly rebutted by the video. I do not, however, agree that the video in this case clearly undermines Griffin's account leaving no genuine issue of material fact. I would reverse and remand for further proceedings.

In my view, the videotape does not "blatantly contradict[]" Griffin's version of the facts "so that no reasonable jury could believe" her, and therefore summary judgment was not appropriate. Scott v. Harris, 550 U.S. 372, 380-81 (2007). Under Scott, in determining whether there are material factual disputes, we must accept the facts as depicted in the video, even when contrary to a party's sworn testimony. However, facts that are not clearly portrayed in the video remain entitled to an interpretation most favorable to the non-moving party. Morales v. American Honda Motor Co., Inc., 71 F.3d 531, 535 (6th Cir. 1995); see Scott, 550 U.S. at 380 (facts must be viewed in a light most favorable to non-moving party when there is a "genuine dispute as to those facts"). Accepting all events portrayed in the video as true, there remains a material factual dispute as to whether Hardrick performed the takedown maneuver maliciously and sadistically to cause harm, rather than "in a good-faith effort to maintain or restore discipline." Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 6 (1992).

In Scott, the Court found that the plaintiff's claim that he was driving in a "cautious and controlled" fashion was clearly rebutted by the video that showed him traveling upwards of 85 miles per hour on narrow roads, swerving around cars, crossing the double-yellow line, forcing other cars traveling in both directions to the side of the road, running multiple red lights, and driving in the left-turn-only lane. Id. at 379-80. The video here, however, does not definitively establish either what transpired prior to Hardrick executing the takedown maneuver, or that Hardrick did not act maliciously or wantonly in executing the maneuver.

Griffin contends that Hardrick told her "she was going to live in hell" and that she "was his bitch." The video, which has no accompanying audio, does not contradict this allegation. The district court's perception of the "calmness" of Hardrick's demeanor is not incompatible with his having made these statements to Griffin, and thus, at this point in the litigation, we should assume he did. As the district court recognized, such statements "could indicate a 'sadistic' or 'malicious' state of mind at the time of the physical encounter." See Wilson v. Seiter, 501 U.S. 294, 302 (1991).

The majority concludes that "[m]ost importantly, the video establishes that Griffin was clearly struggling against both Hardrick and Rutledge before Hardrick employed the leg-sweep maneuver." I do not agree that the video shows that Griffin was struggling with the officers to an extent that no reasonable juror could conclude that Hardrick acted wantonly and maliciously in performing the takedown. The video does show that Griffin began walking away from Hardrick, and that she resisted his initial attempt to grab her arm. Griffin, however, contends that she did so because her arms were already sore and bruised, and that Hardrick's grip caused her additional pain. Indeed, Hardrick concedes that Griffin told him to "watch [her] arms."

The video is ambiguous, however, as to whether Griffin was continuing to struggle at the time of the takedown and, even if she was, whether Hardrick could plausibly have thought a takedown necessary under the circumstances. In the approximately eight second span from when Rutledge took hold of Griffin's other arm until Hardrick performed the takedown maneuver, Griffin can be seen continuing to talk with the two officers with no aggressive physical movement. Hardrick and Rutledge then pull her forward forcefully, sufficient to make her stumble. It appears that Griffin has almost regained her balance when Hardrick performs the takedown, and she continues to be restrained at both arms by the officers. Further, no other inmates were in the area, and a third corrections officer stood nearby observing and ready to intervene. See Seiter, 501 U.S. at 303 (whether conduct "can be characterized as 'wanton' depends upon the constraints facing the official") (emphasis in original).

To be sure, prison officials are entitled to "wide-ranging deference in the adoption and execution of policies and practices that in their judgment are needed to preserve internal order." Whitley v. Albers, 475 U.S. 312, 321-22 (1986). But such deference "does not insulate from review actions taken in bad faith and for no legitimate purpose." Id. at 322. A jury viewing the events portrayed in the video in light of the statements Griffin attributes to Hardrick could reasonably conclude that Hardrick could not plausibly have thought that the use of the takedown maneuver, although executed properly, was necessary, and that, in fact, he performed it solely to inflict pain, even if not of the degree that ultimately occurred.

MEMORANDUM

Pending before the court is the defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment (Docket No. 11), to which the plaintiff has responded (Docket No. 21), and the defendant has replied (Docket No. 30). For the reasons described herein, the defendant's motion will be granted.

BACKGROUND

This case arises out of an incident that occurred when the plaintiff, Trudy Griffin, was detained at the Davidson County Criminal Justice Center ("DCCJC") on August 20, 2005.[1]

Earlier that day, Griffin had accompanied her son while he picked up his children at the children's maternal grandmother's house. (Docket No. 11 Ex. 2 at 4.) The plaintiff's son's exwife, Chrystal Griffin, had previously obtained a restraining order against the plaintiff's son, and, when the plaintiff and her son arrived at the house, Chrystal Griffin called the police to report a violation of the restraining order. (Id. at 4-5.)

Once the police officers arrived at the scene, the plaintiff attempted to tell the officers that Chrystal Griffin was not supposed to "be around [that] house." (Docket No. 11 Ex. 2 at 6.) The officers informed the plaintiff that they did not want to discuss the matter with her, but the plaintiff continued to vigorously explain her version of the situation to the officers. (Id. at 7.) Unable to obtain cooperation from the plaintiff,

[1] Unless otherwise noted, the facts are drawn from the Plaintiff's Reply to Defendant's Statement of Undisputed Material Facts (Docket No. 24), the Defendant's Responses to Plaintiff's Statement of Material Facts in Dispute (Docket No. 29), and related affidavits and exhibits. Although the facts are drawn from submissions made by both parties, on a motion for summary judgment, all inferences are drawn in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. See Matushita Elec. Indus. Co. V. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586 (1986); McLean v. 988011 Ontario, Ltd., 224 F.3d 797, 800 (6th Cir. 2000).

the officers placed the plaintiff under arrest, but she put up some resistance and told the police officers that she was not going to jail. (Id. at 7-8.) In order to control the plaintiff and to enable the officers to put the plaintiff's arms in handcuffs, the officers pinched the plaintiff's arms. (Id. at 8.) After the officers were able to get the plaintiff in the police car, she slid around the back seat and continued doing so during the transport from the house to the DCCJC. Apparently during this time, the plaintiff sustained bruising to her arms and back.[2] (Id. at 8-9.) The plaintiff arrived at the DCCJC without additional incident, was booked, and was placed into a cell.

While in a cell at the DCCJC, Griffin asked the officers on staff if she could go to the nurses' station for treatment of her arm bruises. The officers granted the request, opened the cell door, and Griffin walked down the hall to talk to the nurse. At the nurses' station, Griffin complained to the nurse about her back and arms, and she demanded to be transported to a hospital. The nurse informed Griffin that this was not possible, but Griffin continued to talk to the nurse for several minutes about her bruising, speaking in a raised voice. (Docket No. 11 Ex. 2 at 15.)

The defendant, officer Darrell Hardrick of the Davidson County Sheriff's Office, was on duty at the DCCJC as the sergeant overseeing the booking area. Hardrick observed Griffin acting in a non-compliant manner toward the nurse. He approached Griffin,

[2] When Griffin was initially booked, the nurse at the DCCJC discovered red welts on Griffin's back and bruises on Griffin's arms from the arrest. (Docket No. 27 at 1.)

Griffin claims, threatening her. Specifically, Griffin testified in her deposition that Hardrick told Griffin that she was "going to live in his hell" and that she "was his bitch." (Docket No. 11 Ex. 2 at 17.) While the defendant does not specifically deny that threats were made, there is a video of the incident, and the video, which has no sound, does not depict actions consistent with such hostility.[3] (Docket No. 11 Ex. 5 at 15:08:45-15:09:01.) Rather, during their discussion, Hardrick stood still in front of Griffin with his hands to his sides, while Griffin forcefully pointed at Hardrick and generally acted in an aggressive and defiant manner. (Id.)

The video shows that, after this brief discussion, Griffin attempted to walk away from Hardrick and the nurses' station. (Docket No. 11 Ex. 5 at 15:09:01.) Griffin claims that she did this because she was scared by the threats Hardrick had made and because she wanted to return to her nearby holding cell. (Docket No. 11 Ex. 2 at 16.) The video shows that, as Griffin attempts to walk away from Hardrick, Hardrick takes hold of Griffin's right arm. (Docket No. 11 Ex. 5 at 15:09:10.) The parties agree that, when Hardrick first [3] While, as noted above, a motion for summary judgment typically requires the court to view all facts in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party, the existence of a video depicting the incident can alter this standard. A video that contains clear and relevant information about an incident should be used and relied upon by the court, even when contradicting the facts stated by the nonmoving party. See Scott v. Harris, 550 U.S. 372, 380 (2007). This case contains video footage of the incident from security cameras at the Davidson County Criminal Justice Center. (See Docket No. 11 Ex. 5.) Thus, this video will be relied upon for facts relevant to the matter before the court.

took hold of Griffin's arm, she tried to pull her arm away, telling him to "watch her [bruised] arms." (Docket No. 24 at ¶ 7.) As Hardrick continued to hold onto Griffin's right arm, Griffin forcibly resisted, using her left arm to push away from him. (Docket No. 11 Ex. 5 at 15:09:13.) Another officer, Sergeant Pamela Rutledge, appeared on the scene and grabbed Griffin's left arm. (Docket No. 11 Ex. 3 at 4; Docket No. 11 Ex. 5 at 15:08:52; 15:09:13.) At this point, with one officer on each side of Griffin, a general fracas ensued, in which Griffin thrashed her arms, attempting to pull and push away from the officers' grasps. (Id. at 15:09:13-15:09:20.)

As Griffin continued to forcefully jerk her arms in an attempt to break free from the officers' grasps, Hardrick attempted to bring Griffin under control by tripping her. (Docket No. 11 Ex. 5 at 15:09:19-15:09:23.) His first attempt failed, but his second was successful, and Griffin fell to the ground. (Id. at 15:09:20-15:09:23.) Rutledge, apparently accidentally, fell onto Griffin's leg, breaking Griffin's tibia. (Id at 15:09:24; Docket No. 24 at ¶ 12.)

After falling onto the floor, Griffin complained that her leg was broken, but a DCCJC employee [not a defendant] told Griffin "her leg wasn't broke," and proceeded to drag Griffin to another holding cell area. Firefighters were called, and they wrapped Griffin's leg and brought her to Meharry Medical Center. (Docket No. 11 Ex. 2 at 22.) Griffin's broken tibia required a surgery that used eight screws and a plate to piece her leg back together. (Id. at 24.)

Griffin filed this lawsuit originally in the First Circuit Court for Davidson County, Tennessee, claiming that Hardrick tripped her gratuitously. (Docket No. 1 at 1.) Defendant Hardrick removed the suit to this court, and has now moved for summary judgment. (Id.; Docket No.11.)

ANALYSIS

The plaintiff brought this suit under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, alleging that the defendant's actions violated her rights under the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution. Subsequent briefing has made it clear, however, that, because the incident occurred while the plaintiff was a pretrial detainee, the plaintiff's claim is actually a Section 1983 claim that asserts rights under the Fourteenth Amendment. (See Docket No. 11 at 2; Docket No. 22 at 3.) In addition to her constitutional claim, the plaintiff also alleges a battery claim arising under Tennessee state law.

I. Summary Judgment Standard

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 56(c) provides that summary judgment shall be granted if "the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c). To prevail, the moving party must meet the burden of proving the absence of a genuine issue of material fact as to an essential element of the opposing party's claim. See Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 323 (1986); Logan v. Denny's, Inc., 259 F.3d 558, 566 (6th Cir. 2001).

In determining whether the moving party has met its burden, the court must view the factual evidence and draw all reasonable inferences in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party. See Matsushita Elec. Indus. Co. v. Zenith Radio Corp., 475 U.S. 574, 586 (1986); McLean v. 988011 Ontario, Ltd., 224 F.3d 797, 800 (6th Cir. 2000). "'The court's function is not to weigh the evidence and determine the truth of the matters asserted, 'but to determine whether there is a genuine issue for trial.'" Little Caesar Enters., Inc. v. OPPCO, LLC, 219 F.3d 547, 551 (6th Cir. 2000) (quoting Anderson v. Liberty Lobby, Inc., 477 U.S. 242, 249 (1986)).

If the nonmoving party fails to make a sufficient showing on an essential element of the case with respect to which she has the burden, however, the moving party is entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law. See Williams v. Ford Motor Co., 187 F.3d 533, 537-38 (6th Cir. 1999). To preclude summary judgment, the nonmoving party "must go beyond the pleadings and come forward with specific facts to demonstrate that there is a genuine issue for trial." Chao v. Hall Holding Co., Inc., 285 F.3d 415, 424 (6th Cir. 2002). "The mere existence of a scintilla of evidence in support of the [nonmoving party's] position will be insufficient; there must be evidence on which the jury could reasonably find for the [nonmoving party]." Shah v. Racetrac Petroleum Co., 338 F.3d 557, 566 (6th Cir. 2003) (quoting Anderson, 477 U.S. at 252). If the evidence offered by the nonmoving party is "merely colorable," or "not significantly probative," or not enough to lead a fair-minded jury to find for the nonmoving party, the motion for summary judgment should be granted. Anderson, 477 U.S. at 249-52. "A genuine dispute between the parties on an issue of material fact must exist to render summary judgment inappropriate." Hill v. White, 190 F.3d 427, 430 (6th Cir. 1999) (citing Anderson, 477 U.S. at 247-49).

II. Plaintiff's Claims

The plaintiff brings this suit under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, alleging that the defendant's actions while she was a pretrial detainee at the DCCJC violated her rights under the Fourteenth Amendment. (Docket No. 1 at 1; Docket No. 11 at 2; Docket No. 22 at 3.) Specifically, the plaintiff alleges that the takedown maneuver employed by the defendant constituted excessive force in violation of her Fourteenth Amendment rights. The plaintiff also alleges a common law battery claim against the defendant pursuant to the Tennessee Government Tort Liability Act, Tenn. Code Ann. § 29-20-101, et seq.

A. Fourteenth Amendment Claim

The defendant asserts that he did not use excessive force, and that, even if there is a fact question as to whether the force was excessive, he is entitled to qualified immunity. (Docket No. 11.)

In this case, Griffin was a pretrial detainee. A pretrial detainee is a person who has been charged with a crime but who has not yet been tried on the charge, and who is legitimately incarcerated prior to the determination of guilt or innocence. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 523 (1979). Griffin had been arrested and incarcerated, but she had not been convicted of a crime at the time of the incident. (See Docket No. 11 Ex. 2 at 10-11.) Pretrial detainees retain at least the same constitutional rights as enjoyed by convicted prisoners. Bell, 441 U.S. at 545. A pretrial detainee's constitutional protections derive from the Fourteenth Amendment's Due Process Clause. Graham v. Connor, 490 U.S. 386, 395 n.10 (1989). The Due Process Clause affords pretrial detainees, like the plaintiff, protection from "conditions [that] amount to punishment." Bell, 441 U.S. at 535. The Sixth Circuit has stated that a pretrial detainee "is entitled to the same protection under the Eighth Amendment by way of the Fourteenth Amendment's Due Process Clause." Watkins v. Evans, Nos. 95-4162, 95-4341, 1996 WL 499094, at *2 (6th Cir. Sept. 3, 1996) (unpublished opinion) (citing Whitley v. Albers, 475 U.S. 312, 327 (1986)).

The Eighth Amendment "forbids the infliction of 'cruel and unusual punishments.'" Spencer v. Bouchard, 449 F.3d 721, 727 (6th Cir. 2006) (quoting U.S. Const. amend. VIII). The test under the Eighth Amendment's cruel and unusual punishment clause is whether the defendant caused the "unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain." Watkins, 1996 WL 499094, at *2 (citing Whitley, 475 U.S. at 319; Moore v. Holbrook, 2 F.3d 697, 700 (6th Cir. 1993)). The Supreme Court has held that "unnecessary and wanton" inflictions of pain are those "totally without penological justification." Rhodes v. Chapman, 452 U.S. 337, 346 (1981); see also Hope v. Pelzer, 536 U.S. 730, 737 (2002).

In determining whether a defendant caused "unnecessary and wanton infliction of pain," the court must "determine whether the force was applied in a good-faith effort to maintain or restore discipline, or 'maliciously and sadistically' to cause harm." Watkins, 1996 WL 499094, at *2 (citing Hudson v. McMillian, 503 U.S. 1, 7 (1992)). This test consists of both an objective and a subjective component. Id. (citing Farmer v. Brennan, 114 S.Ct. 1970, 1977 (1994)). The objective component requires that the pain be serious, while the subjective component requires that the conduct be wanton. Id. (citing Wilson v. Seiter, 501 U.S. 294, 297-300 (1991); Moore, 2 F.3d at 700). Here, the objective component of the "unnecessary and wanton" test is not in dispute. Hardrick has conceded that Griffin "suffered a serious injury following the takedown maneuver." (Docket No. 13 at 5.)

The remaining issue concerns the subjective component of the test; that is, whether Hardrick employed the takedown procedure wantonly. See Watkins, 1996 WL 499094, at *2. In determining whether the force was applied wantonly, the court should consider factors such as the perceived necessity for the application of force and the proportion between the amount of force used and the necessity for the force. Whitley, 475 U.S. at 321. This standard does not ask whether, in hindsight, the use of force was absolutely necessary. Id. Rather, the key issue is "whether the use of force could plausibly have been thought necessary, or instead, [whether it] evinced such wantonness with respect to the unjustified infliction of harm as is tantamount to a knowing willingness that it occur." Id. (emphasis added).

The court finds that a reasonable jury could not conclude that Hardrick acted in a sufficiently wanton manner. While Hardrick does not deny that he made threatening comments toward Griffin, the video does not portray the discussion between Hardrick and Griffin as hostile. Instead, Hardrick appears calm and non-aggressive, and it is Griffin who acts belligerently toward Hardrick. In fact, Hardrick never infringed on Griffin's space, touched, or grabbed her until she attempted to walk away from him. While the court does not agree with the defendant's contention that such threats are irrelevant (Docket No. 29 ¶ 1), as they could indicate a "sadistic" or "malicious" state of mind at the time of the physical encounter, the marked calmness of the defendant's demeanor portrayed in the video indicates that the court should not afford significant weight to the plaintiff's unrebutted allegations that such threats were made.

As to the actual takedown maneuver itself, the evidence establishes that, when Hardrick tripped the plaintiff, he did so in a "good faith effort to restore discipline" and that "the use of force could plausibly have been thought necessary." See Watkins, 1996 WL 499094, at *2; Whitley, 475 U.S. at 321. To review, the video establishes that Griffin was acting defiantly toward Hardrick and Rutledge during the incident. She had created a disturbance outside of the nurses' station, argued with Hardrick, and attempted to walk away from Hardrick. After Hardrick restrained her by holding onto her right arm, she tried to push away from him using her left arm until Rutledge was able to take control of that arm. Even then, with an officer holding each arm, Griffin continued to jerk her arms, act defiantly, and attempt to walk away.

Hardrick accurately testified in his deposition that, at this moment, Griffin was "struggling" with the officers, as the video clearly reveals. (Docket No. 11 Ex. 5 at 15:09:15-15:09:20; Docket No. 28 at 5.) He perceived Griffin as "noncompliant . . . actively aggressive and combative."[4] (Docket No. 28 at 5.) Hardrick believed that it was "necessary to conduct a leg sweep [tripping maneuver]" on Griffin in order to put her in a "felony prone position" (face forward on the ground) so that she could not use her legs or arms to continue to resist. (Id.; See Docket No. 11 Ex. 4 at 5.)

No reasonable jury could conclude that, at the time Hardrick tripped Griffin, he was acting wantonly. Rather, the evidence establishes that Hardrick "plausibly thought" that a takedown was necessary to bring Griffin under control and that, as such, a jury could only conclude that Hardrick acted in "good faith to restore order" at the time he tripped Griffin. Because no reasonable jury could conclude that Hardrick acted wantonly in violation of Griffin's Fourteenth Amendment rights, a discussion of qualified immunity is unnecessary.

B. Plaintiff's State Law Claim

The plaintiff alleges a common law battery claim against the defendant pursuant to the Tennessee Government Tort Liability Act (GTLA), Tenn. Code Ann. § 29-20-101, et seq. (Docket No. 1 at 1; Docket No. 22 at 6.) The defendant has moved for summary judgment on this claim, asserting that he did not

[4] The plaintiff contends that there is no evidence that, while the officers had control of Griffin's arms, there were orders given to her that she did not obey. (Docket No. 22 at 2 n.1.) While the court agrees that there is no evidence as to what precisely the officers were saying or ordering at that moment, it is clear that Griffin was trying forcefully to get away from the officers and was out of control.

commit a battery on the plaintiff as a matter of law. (Docket No. 11 at 2.)

Under the GTLA, individual governmental employees may be sued for their intentional torts. Evans v. City of Etowah, No. 1:06-cv-252, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 27275, at *33 (E.D. Tenn. Apr. 2, 2008) (citing Baines v. Wilson County, 86 S.W.3d 575, 583 n.5 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2002)). Under Tennessee law, a cause of action for battery against a police officer requires a showing that the officer has caused damage by an excessive and unprovoked use of force. Butler v. City of Englewood, No. 1:07-cv-184, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 82004, at *37 (E.D. Tenn. Aug. 25, 2008) (citing City of Mason v. Banks, 581 S.W.2d 621, 626 (Tenn. 1979)). Where a plaintiff asserts a common law battery claim based on the same use of force as a corresponding Section 1983 claim, the court's "analysis regarding [a] Plaintiff's [Section] 1983 excessive force claim applies equally to her Tennessee state law claims for . . . battery." Id. at *38. As was set forth in the previous discussion, the defendant is entitled to summary judgment on the Section 1983 claim because no reasonable jury could conclude that he acted wantonly toward the plaintiff when he tripped her, thus establishing that he did not use excessive force. Therefore, summary judgment is equally appropriate on the battery claim.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons discussed herein, the defendant's motion for summary judgment will be granted.

An appropriate order will enter.

ORDER

BEFORE: COLE, GILMAN, and WHITE, Circuit Judges.

The court having received a petition for rehearing en banc, which was circulated to all active judges of this court, none of whom requested a vote on the suggestion for rehearing en banc, the petition for rehearing has been referred to the original panel.

The panel has further reviewed the petition for rehearing and concludes that the issues raised in the petition were fully considered upon the original submission and decision of the case. Accordingly, the petition is denied. Judge White would grant rehearing for the reasons stated in her dissent.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This case arises out of the detention of Petitioner Trudy Griffin ("Griffin") at the Criminal Justice Center ("CJC") in Nashville, Tennessee, on August 25, 2005, after her arrest for disorderly conduct and resisting arrest. (App. 1a ¶ 1). Respondent, Darrell Hardrick ("Hardrick"), a Sergeant working at the CJC at the time of the incident, adopts and incorporates by reference the recitation of the facts contained in the Opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit ("Sixth Circuit"). (Pet. App. 2a-5a).

In addition, Hardrick must point out that Griffin has made a number of misstatements of the pertinent facts in her Petition. First, Griffin suggests to this Court that it is undisputed that Hardrick told her that "she was going to live in his hell" and that "she was his bitch" when he first approached her at the CJC nurses' station. (Pet. 3). However, Hardrick did not admit these "facts" at the summary judgment stage. Instead, Hardrick averred that these were not "material" facts in dispute for summary judgment purposes, since these alleged threats did not occur at the same time, or even immediately before, his leg-sweep of Griffin, and the circumstances surrounding the subsequent leg-sweep were shown on videotape. (App. 7a ¶ 1). The Sixth Circuit agreed that these alleged threats prior to Hardrick's use of force did not create a genuine issue of material fact "because the videotape shows that Griffin was still struggling with the officers at the time Hardrick employed the leg-sweep maneuver." (Pet. App. 12a). Based upon the events depicted on the videotape, "Hardrick had a reasonable basis to believe that further force was necessary to control Griffin, even if he had earlier made the generalized threats against her." (Id. at 12a-13a).

Griffin also insists that she did not resist either officer after they attempted to escort her to her holding cell. (Pet. 3). The videotape blatantly contradicts this self-serving statement. The videotape shows Hardrick take hold of Griffin's arm, with Griffin attempting to pull away. (App. 14a,15:09:10); see also (Pet. App. 24a-25a). As he continues to hold her arm, Griffin forcibly resists and tries to push away from him. (App. 14a, 15:09:13); see also (Pet. App 25a). When Hardrick is joined by another officer, Sergeant Pamela Rutledge, Griffin continues to forcefully jerk her arms in an attempt to break free of the officers' grasps. (App. 14a 15:09:19-15:09:23); see also (Pet. App. 25a). It is at that point that the leg-sweep occurs. (Id.) As the Sixth Circuit pointed out: "Whether or not she felt that she had a good reason for walking away, Griffin was resisting Hardrick and Rutledge before Hardrick used the leg-sweep maneuver." (Pet. App. 13a).

Finally, Griffin insinuates that Hardrick intentionally caused Sergeant Rutledge to fall on Griffin's leg. (Pet. 3). As the Sixth Circuit noted, it was Sergeant Rutledge falling on Griffin, not Hardrick's leg-sweep maneuver, that was the actual force that broke Griffin's leg. Sergeant Rutledge's fall was not some calculated maneuver, but instead "an unfortunate accident." (Pet. App. 12a). Griffin did not file suit against Sergeant Rutledge.

The United States District Court for the Middle District of Tennessee ("District Court") granted Hardrick summary judgment on Griffin's Fourteenth Amendment excessive force claim and on her Tennessee state law battery claim. (Id. at 21a-35a). In reaching its decision, the District Court reviewed the videotape of the use of force at issue and determined that no reasonable jury could conclude that Hardrick was acting wantonly, with the intent to inflict pain, at the time that he performed the leg-sweep on Griffin. (Id. at 32a). Griffin appealed the District Court's ruling only as to her Fourteenth Amendment claim, and the Sixth Circuit affirmed. (Id. at 1a-15a). The Sixth Circuit then denied Griffin's request for rehearing en banc. (Id. at 36a-37a).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Griffin leads off her Petition by asserting that the Sixth Circuit's decision contradicts this Court's holding in Scott v. Harris, 550 U.S. 372 (2007). Nothing could be further from the truth. The Sixth Circuit applied this Court's teachings in Scott and determined that, based upon the video evidence, no reasonable juror could find that Hardrick had used excessive force on Griffin. Griffin's reliance on the fact that there was a dissenting opinion as support for her argument that the Sixth Circuit incorrectly applied Scott v. Harris is misplaced, given that the Scott opinion itself contained a dissent from Justice Stevens, who interpreted the videotape in question differently than the rest of this Honorable Court. The mere presence of a dissenting opinion does not constitute a misapplication of Scott. Moreover, regardless of the type of evidence at issue, one judge's perception that there is a genuine issue of material fact does not mandate automatic reversal of summary judgment when that perception is not shared by the other members of the appellate panel.

Griffin also argues that this case presents an important issue of federal law given the increasing prevalence of video evidence in civil rights actions. While it is certainly true that such evidence is becoming the norm, this Court has already recognized as much and has made its decision as to the role that video evidence should play at the summary judgment stage. This Court addressed that very issue in 2007 in Scott v. Harris, and there is no legitimate reason to re-visit the principles of that well-reasoned opinion a mere three years later.

REASONS FOR DENYING THE PETITION

I. The Sixth Circuit Correctly Applied Scott v. Harris.

A. A Dissenting Opinion Does Not Equate To Misapplication Of Scott, Which Contained Its Own Dissent.

This Court has unequivocally stated that "[a] petition for a writ of certiorari will be granted only for compelling reasons." Sup. Ct. R. 10. Moreover, this Court has identified one example of such a compelling situation as follows: "a United States court of appeals has decided an important federal question in a way that conflicts with relevant decisions of this Court. . ." Sup. Ct. R. 10(a). In this case, however, the Sixth Circuit correctly applied this Court's precedent. Accordingly, review should be denied.

In Scott v. Harris, this Court ruled that, when a case involves an accurate and unaltered videotape, a court deciding summary judgment must view the facts in the light depicted by that videotape, even if it contradicts one party's version of events. 550 U.S. at 378-81. The Court also stated that "[w]hen opposing parties tell two different stories, one of which is blatantly contradicted by the record, so that no reasonable jury could believe it, a court should not adopt that version of the facts for purposes of ruling on a motion for summary judgment." 550 U.S. at 380.

The Sixth Circuit's Opinion in this case was in perfect harmony with Scott. While it is impossible to expect every individual who sees a videotape to interpret it in an identical manner, this does not mean that federal judges should be precluded from viewing videotapes of incidents and determining what those videotapes actually show. And if those videotapes contradict a plaintiff's version of events, a judge is not required to abandon common sense and ignore his or her own observations merely because a non-moving party is entitled to have facts interpreted in the light most favorable to her at the summary judgment stage. Scott v. Harris stands for these very tenets, and the Sixth Circuit properly applied this Court's directives in affirming summary judgment in Hardrick's favor.

Here, the videotape depicts the incident underlying Griffin's excessive force claim and shows the following: Hardrick approaches Griffin, who is at the nurses' station at the CJC, and attempts to speak with her. (App. 14a, 15:08-45-15:09:01). Griffin admits that she had been talking to the nurse for several minutes and that she was speaking to the nurse in a raised voice. (App. 2a at ¶ 4).

Griffin walks away from Hardrick, and he takes her arm; Griffin attempts to jerk her arm away; another officer takes hold of Griffin's other arm and, after a few seconds of Griffin struggling with them, they begin to try to escort her down the hall; Griffin resists their attempts to escort her down the hall, and Hardrick executes a leg-sweep maneuver to take her to the ground; Sergeant Rutledge then accidentally falls on Griffin's leg. (App. 14a, 15:09:10-15:09:23).

The Sixth Circuit viewed the videotape and found that "the video clearly shows Griffin resisting the officers' efforts to lead her down the hallway and her efforts to break away from them." (Pet. App. 13a). Based upon the facts shown on the videotape, the Sixth Circuit ruled that no reasonable jury could find that Hardrick's actions constituted excessive force under the Fourteenth Amendment. Accordingly, it affirmed Hardrick's entitlement to summary judgment. (Id.)

One judge sitting on the Sixth Circuit panel dissented, however. The dissenting judge indicated that she would have reversed the District Court's grant of summary judgment to Hardrick because she disagreed as to whether the videotape showed that "Griffin was struggling with the officers to the extent that no reasonable juror could conclude that Hardrick acted wantonly and maliciously in performing the takedown." (Id. at 17a-18a).

Griffin argues that the existence of this dissent establishes that the Sixth Circuit Opinion conflicts with Scott v. Harris. Griffin apparently overlooks the fact that Scott itself contained a dissent in which one Justice – Justice Stevens – interpreted a videotape differently than the rest of this Court. Indeed, there was a wide discrepancy between the majority's and Justice Stevens' interpretations of the events depicted in the Scott videotape. While the majority opinion characterized the events as "resemble[ing] a Hollywood-style car chase of the most frightening sort," 550 U.S. at 380, Justice Stevens found the videotape much less disturbing, noting that "[t]his is hardly the stuff of Hollywood. To the contrary, the video does not reveal any incidents that could even remotely be characterized as 'close calls.'" 550 U.S. at 392. The majority opinion pointed out Justice Stevens' contrary interpretation of the videotape, but instead of ruling that such a different viewpoint precluded summary judgment, this Court stated that it was "happy to allow the video to speak for itself." 550 U.S. at 379, n. 5.

The conflicting interpretations of the Scott videotape are so divergent that it almost appears as if Justice Stevens was watching an entirely different videotape than the rest of this Honorable Court. And with this as the backdrop of its decision, this Court nonetheless ruled that Deputy Timothy Scott had acted reasonably as a matter of law during his high-speed pursuit of Victor Harris. If video evidence susceptible to such different interpretations as those in Scott can be used to grant summary judgment to an officer, certainly the same is true of the videotape in this case, where the only real interpretative contention is the degree to which Griffin was struggling against the correctional officers when Hardrick executed a leg-sweep maneuver. (Pet. App. 13a, 17a-18a).

As in Scott v. Harris, the Sixth Circuit here ruled that the video evidence, in effect, "spoke for itself." And as was the case in Scott, one member of the panel had a different interpretation of what the videotape showed. But there is no reason for this Court to revisit Scott to determine whether an appellate judge's dissenting opinion somehow changes the way that video evidence can be used at the summary judgment stage, since Scott itself contained a similar dissent.

B. Adopting Griffin's Argument Would Result In Mandatory Reversal Of Summary Judgment When There Is A Dissent At The Appellate Level.

Further, taking Griffin's argument to its logical extension, a District Court is automatically incorrect in granting summary judgment every time a Court of Appeals opinion regarding that decision contains a dissent, no matter what kind of evidence is involved. After all, Griffin is arguing that, since one federal judge viewed the facts in a different light than others, summary judgment was incorrect as a matter of law. Quite candidly, this is why appellate decisions are made by panels.

The appellate system takes into account the fact that different individuals can analyze issues and facts in a different manner, even when all of those individuals are trained and respected legal minds. Clearly, a less than unanimous appellate decision as to whether summary judgment was appropriate does not merit mandatory reversal, even if a dissenting judge sees genuine issues of material fact where her colleagues have seen none. Griffin's arguments to the contrary are wholly without merit, and this Court should deny review of her Petition.

II. This Court Has Already Decided The Manner In Which Courts May Use Video Evidence At Summary Judgment.

In addition to a situation where a Court of Appeals has decided a case contrary to this Court's precedent, another example of when a petition for writ of certiorari may be granted is when it addresses "an important question of federal law that has not been, but should be settled by this Court . . . " Sup. Ct. R. 10(c). The present case involves no such "important question of federal law" that has yet to be settled by this Court. This Court has already ruled upon the manner in which video evidence can be used at the summary judgment stage. And this Court has already ruled that the reasonableness of an officer's actions is a question of law, not fact. Scott v. Harris, 550 U.S. at 381, n. 8. The Court addressed these issues thoroughly in Scott v. Harris, decided a mere 3 years ago.

This case presents a situation similar to that of Scott v. Harris in terms of the video evidence, with only slight variations. If a dissent in a case involving video evidence meant that summary judgment was inappropriate as a matter of law, this Court presumably would have reached a different decision in Scott v. Harris, given Justice Stevens' dissenting interpretation of the videotape in that case. Griffin simply wants this Court to act as another set of eyes to examine the video evidence here and pass judgment on what it shows. That is hardly a compelling reason for review, and it could lead every plaintiff who does not like a Court of Appeals' interpretation of video evidence to believe that he has a right to have this Court second-guess that appellate panel's observations.

This Court has established federal law on the role of video evidence at the summary judgment stage of litigation. Granting review in this case would only serve to unnecessarily complicate a body of law that has already been settled.

CONCLUSION

This case is an unremarkable use of force case, with the only added component being the existence of a videotape. This Court has already addressed that situation in Scott v. Harris and has delineated the way that courts should view video evidence at the summary judgment stage of litigation. Scott v. Harris contained one dissenting opinion regarding what was shown on the videotape in question. The same is true of the Sixth Circuit Opinion in this case. The existence of a dissenting opinion does not constitute a misapplication of Scott v. Harris, since Scott itself was decided with the backdrop of Justice Stevens' dissent. Because this case does not present a compelling reason for review, Griffin's Petition should be denied.

DEFENDANT'S STATEMENT OF MATERIAL FACTS NOT IN DISPUTE

1. On August 20, 2005, Plaintiff Trudy Griffin ("Plaintiff') was arrested for disorderly conduct and resisting arrest. See Plaintiff 's Response to Defendant's Interrogatory No.7, attached to Defendant's Motion as Exhibit A.

RESPONSE:

Agreed.

2. Plaintiff was transported to the Davidson County Criminal Justice Center following her arrest. See

Appendix A

Deposition of Trudy Griffin ("Griffin Depo."), relevant portions attached to Defendant's Motion as Exhibit B, at pp. 56-57.

RESPONSE:

Agreed.

3. While in a cell at the criminal justice center, Plaintiff requested that she be allowed to go to the nurses' station. Id. at p. 62. The officers opened the cell door and Plaintiff went down the hall to talk to the nurse. rd. at pp. 62-63. Plaintiff complained to the nurse about her back and her arms. rd. at p. 64.

RESPONSE:

Agreed.

4. Plaintiff demanded to be transported to Summit Hospital. rd. at p. 64. The nurse explained that she could not do so and Plaintiff raised her voice to the nurse. Plaintiff talked to the nurse for several minutes. rd. at pp. 65-66.

RESPONSE:

Agreed.

5. Defendant Darrell Hardrick, a corrections officer with the Davidson County Sheriff's Office, encountered

Plaintiff at the end of his shift. See Deposition of Darrell Hardrick ("Hardrick Depo."), relevant portions attached to Defendant's Motion as Exhibit C, at p. 9. He was on duty as the sergeant over the booking area on August 20, 2005. rd. at p. 6.

RESPONSE:

Agreed.

6. Hardrick observed Plaintiff acting in a non-compliant manner with regard to the instructions she received from the nurse. Plaintiff walked away from Hardrick when he attempted to speak to her about the situation. rd. at pp. 9-10.

RESPONSE:

Agreed.

7. Plaintiff pulled her arm away from Hardrick when he first took hold of it. Id. at pp.72-73.

RESPONSE:

Agreed.

Plaintiff told Hardrick to, "watch her arms" because they hurt from being bruised earlier. (Depo. Griffin, Exhibit A, pp. 72-73)

8. Hardrick asked a female officer, Sgt. Rutledge, to assist him with Plaintiff. Griffin Depo. at pp. 71-72. Sgt. Rutledge grabbed Plaintiff's left arm, and Plaintiff pulled her left arm away. Id. at p. 74.

RESPONSE:

Denied as stated. Plaintiff denies she pulled her left arm way from Officer Rutledge. Plaintiff testified she only did a "little bit" because her arms were "on fire" from bruises. (Id. p. 74)

9. Hardrick employed the takedown maneuver to get Plaintiff to the ground after she had acted aggressively toward him and had attempted to jerk away. Hardrick Depo. at p. 10.

RESPONSE:

See attached.

10. Davidson County Sheriff's Office deputies are taught that a "two in one escort" accompanied by a trip takedown is appropriate when there is "[a]ctive resistance where the subject has had options to comply and [has] obviously not." Deposition of Subject Control Instructor Kevin Johnson ("Johnson Depo."), relevant portions attached to Defendant's Motion as Exhibit D, at p. 36.

RESPONSE:

Appendix A

Admitted for the purpose of Summary Judgment.

Response to No. 9:

Denied.

Plaintiff was talking to Hardrick at the Nurse's Station. Plaintiff walked away from Hardrick after he threatened her by saying "she was going to live in his hell. .. "Plaintiff walked away from Hardrick to go to a holding cell. Hardrick grabbed Plaintiff's arms. Plaintiff told him her arm hurt and she pulled away. Officer Rutledge then took a hold of Plaintiff's left arm. The officers were leading her down the hall. (Answer to Amended Complaint, paragraph 2.1. RE No. _____) The Plaintiff was not resisting, was not acting aggressively and was not struggling. As they pushed her down the hall she fell forward a little bit. Hardrick then tripped her causing her to fall and Officer Rutledge to fall on top of the Plaintiff crushing her tibia (rd. pp. 70-75, Video Tape at 15:15.09, Defendant Ex. E)

11. The takedown took place in the hallway near the nurse's station in the jail intake area. See Affidavit of Constance Taite ("Taite Aff.") filed contemporaneously herewith, at ¶ 6. That hallway was the only passage way between the booking room and the jail intake area. Taite

Aff. at ¶ 7. The officers then moved Plaintiff into a holding cell. Griffin Depo. at p. 82.

RESPONSE:

Admitted.

12. Plaintiff testified that it was Sgt. Rutledge who "crushed" her leg into the ground and bent Plaintiff's arm back "so far that the bone was popping out" of Plaintiff's skin. Griffin Depo. at pp. 92-93 and p. 83, respectively.

RESPONSE:

Agreed. Officer Rutledge fell on top of the Plaintiff breaking her tibia. (Defendant Exhibit E at 15:15. Ex. _____)

The Plaintiff's arms were not broken.

APPENDIX B — IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE MIDDLE DISTRICT OF TENNESSEE NASHVILLE DIVISION

Civil No. 3:08-CV-828
Judge Trauger
JURY DEMAND

TRUDY GRIFFIN,

Plaintiff,

v.

DARRELL HARDRICK, Individually

Defendant.

DEFENDANT'S RESPONSE TO PLAINTIFF'S STATEMENT OF MATERIAL FACTS IN DISPUTE

1. Hardrick threatened Griffin after hearing her yelling to the nurse through the Plexiglas window at the Criminal Justice Center's nurses' station (Depo. Griffin p. 67:8-14)

RESPONSE: This is not a fact that is material to the disposition of Defendant's summary judgment motion. Any words spoken by Hardrick to Griffin prior to the takedown maneuver, which is depicted on the videotape filed as Exhibit E in support of Defendant's motion, are not material to the issue of whether the takedown maneuver itself constituted willful and wanton infliction of pain in violation of Griffin's constitutional rights.

2. Griffin walked away from Hardrick to go back to her cell. Hardrick grabbed her arm and she pulled it back because it hurt her. (Id. P. 73: 7-14)

RESPONSE: This is not a fact that is material to the disposition of Defendant's summary judgment motion. The reasons that Griffin may have pulled her arm away from Defendant are not material to the issue of whether the takedown employed by Defendant constituted willful and wanton infliction of pain in violation of Griffin's constitutional rights.

3. Hardrick then grabbed Griffin's right arm and another deputy, Pamela Rutledge, grabbed her left arm. Griffin told both officers to watch her arms because they were bruised. (Id. P. 72: 14-22)

RESPONSE: This is not a material fact in dispute. It is admitted that there was an officer on either side of Griffin escorting her down the hall. What Griffin may have told the officers about her arms is not material to the issue of whether the takedown employed by Defendant constituted willful and wanton infliction of pain in violation of Griffin's constitutional rights. Further, the actions of non-defendant Pamela Rutledge are not relevant to Plaintiff's claims against Defendant.

4. As soon as both arms were secured by the officers Griffin did not resist nor did she struggle to free her arms. She only complained that the officers were hurting her. (Id. P. 72: 19-22; p. 73: 18-25; p. 74: 1-23) (See, Exhibit 2, Depo. Hardrick)

RESPONSE: There is no support for this "fact" in Exhibit 2. In fact, Defendant clearly testified that Griffin was being noncompliant. Exhibit 2 at p. 12. Thus, this "fact" should be stricken. Further, what Griffin may have told the officers about her arms is not material to the issue of whether the takedown employed by Defendant constituted willful and wanton infliction of pain in violation of Griffin's constitutional rights.

5. The officers were escorting her down the hall. She was not attempting to get away from them. (Answer to Complaint, paragraph 2.1) Instead, Griffin was slightly pushed by Hardrick. (Depo. Griffin p. 76: 8-10)

RESPONSE: There is no support for this "fact" in the Answer despite Plaintiff's assertion to the contrary. In fact, the Answer specifically states that Plaintiff was actively resisting the officers. Accordingly, this fact should be stricken. Further, Griffin's characterization of having been "slightly pushed" by Hardrick is not a disputed material fact, as the videotape of the incident speaks for itself, and the issue of whether Griffin was initially "slightly pushed" as she was escorted down the hall is not material to the issue of whether the takedown employed by Defendant constituted willful and wanton infliction of pain in violation of Griffin's constitutional rights.

6. As she was being escorted down the hall, Griffin turned her head to say something to Hardrick. Instead of responding to her, he tripped her. (Depo. Griffin p. 76:11-18; p. 80: 4-10) (Exhibit 2, Depo. Hardrick)

RESPONSE: There is no support for this "fact" in Exhibit 2. In fact, Defendant clearly testified that Griffin was being noncompliant. Exhibit 2 at p. 12. Further, any words Griffin may have said or attempted to say are not material to the issue of whether the takedown employed by Defendant constituted willful and wanton infliction of pain in violation of Griffin's constitutional rights.

7. The trip caught the other deputy completely off guard. (Exhibit 2, Depo. Hardrick)

RESPONSE: There is no support for this "fact" in Exhibit 2. Exhibit 2 contains no testimony stating or even indicating that the trip "caught the other deputy completely off guard." Thus, this fact should be stricken. Further, the actions or reactions of non-defendant Pamela Rutledge are not relevant to Plaintiff's claims against Defendant.

8. Griffin fell to the hard concrete floor of the Criminal Justice Center hallway completely uncontrolled by Hardrick and Rutledge. (Id.)

RESPONSE: There is no support for this "fact" in Exhibit 2. Exhibit 2 contains no testimony stating or even indicating that "Griffin fell to the hard concrete floor of the Criminal Justice Center hallway completely uncontrolled by Hardrick and Rutledge."

Thus, this fact should be stricken.

Appendix B

9. Rutledge was so caught off guard by Hardrick's trip she fell on top of Griffin crushing her left tibia just below the knee. (Exhibit 1, ER records) (Exhibit 2, Depo. Hardrick, Depo. Limbird, p. 9: 1-21) Griffin's fall was so uncontrolled that she hit her head on the floor. (Depo. Griffin p. 83: 8-10)

RESPONSE: The actions or reactions of non-defendant Pamela Rutledge are not relevant to Plaintiff's claims against Defendant; thus, this is not a material fact in dispute. Further, Defendant does not dispute that Griffin's tibia was fractured.

10. The purpose for Hardrick and Rutledge holding each of Griffin's arms while they escorted her down the hall was to control her and in the process lessen any possible injuries to her. (Depo. Johnson, p. 37: 22-24; p. 38: 1-2)

RESPONSE: This is not a material fact in dispute.

11. Two officers escorting a subject are not supposed to let go of a subject who is being taken down because letting go of subject can cause injury. (Id. P. 38: 8-14)

RESPONSE: This is not a material fact in dispute.

12. If a suspect is tripped each officer is supposed to keep hold of the suspect's arm making the bring down a controlled bringing down. (Id. p. 38: 17-25; p. 39:23)

RESPONSE: This is not a material fact in dispute.

13. Griffin was not resisting her escort to any degree that justified her being tripped. (Depo. Griffin p. 72: 19-22; p. 73: 18-25; p. 74: 1-23, Exhibit 2, Depo. Hardrick)

RESPONSE: This states a legal conclusion and thus is not a material fact in dispute for purposes of summary judgment. Further, Exhibit 2 contains absolutely no testimony to support this "fact." Exhibit 2 reflects Defendant's testimony that Plaintiff was being noncompliant and that the takedown was initiated for that reason. Exhibit 2 at p. 12.

14. The tripping of Ms. Griffin was not controlled thus causing her injuries. (Exhibit 2, Depo. Hardrick)

RESPONSE: There is no support for this "fact" in Exhibit 2. Exhibit 2 contains no testimony stating or even indicating that the tripping of Griffin was "not controlled." Thus, it should be stricken.

15. After she fell to the floor, Griffin complained that her leg as broken, but an employee told her "her leg wasn't broke" and dragged her to another room. (Depo. Griffin p. 8: 14-24)

RESPONSE: This is not a material fact in dispute for purposes of summary judgment. What Griffin said to any other employees at the Criminal Justice Center and the actions of any Criminal Justice Center employees other than Defendant are irrelevant to the issue of whether Defendant himself willfully and wantonly inflicted pain upon Griffin in violation of Griffin's constitutional rights. Thus, it should not be considered.
